Dear friends,

Last Tuesday I met with my supervisor and received an assignment: find out about a life changed by God through Campus Crusade in Utah, Idaho, Nevada or Oregon and write it up in a 350 word story. So after swallowing some fear, I started making phone calls and learned about Laine, a self-described former party girl who became a Christian this August. She is already exclaiming, "I just want to learn and read more so I can talk to people about God!"

That Tuesday was an outstanding day. Not only did I receive my first story assignment for Worldwide Challenge (Campus Crusade's magazine), it marked my last day of training to become a writer for Global Media Communications (GMC)!

After praying about the change for much of last year, on August 12th I officially traded my job in Financial Services to become a writer for the GMC Web team (and sometimes the magazine). I am really excited about the change. Over the last year I have had a growing passion to declare what God has done. Meanwhile, the Internet has become an increasingly powerful way of communicating.

In fact, 64 percent of Internet users (82 million Americans) use the Web as a spiritual and religious resource (according to a Pew Internet & American Life Project Survey). Today, every 60 seconds someone indicates a decision to put his or her faith in Jesus on a Campus Crusade Web site.

Honestly, I can't think of a way to have a greater impact as a writer than on the Internet. In my new job, I am the primary writer for CCCi.org, Campus Crusade's main organizational Web site. It is the first place most people will go when they want more information about Campus Crusade or the relationship with Jesus they associate with Campus Crusade.

Right now the Web site is being completely redone, so I get to be a part of the new design almost from the beginning (If you go to the Web site now you will see a temporary fix. I recommend waiting for the new site). It is quite a task to represent a ministry in 191 countries with over 50 ministries!

I can see how God has used the last year to help me grow personally and prepare me for this new position. Thank you for partnering with me as together we "publish God's glorious deeds" and tell about His amazing salvation!
